

We've actually been thinking about this for some time already, but never came around to it until very recently. Yeah, blame it all on work. We're so busy developing, answering support tickets, having lunch meetings that we never worked on it, until we organized Joomla Day Malaysia 2008. Joomla Day was a fun community event meant for us all Joomla lovers to gather around and talk about Joomla and share our experiences with Joomla. But during the sessions, we found out that many people would like to know more about the technical know-how of Joomla and building Joomla components.

Last year, we made a mock Joomla Advance User training for the IT department at a local university. What initially started as a 20 participant signed in for the training ended up having doubled the number of participants. We didn't know that many people wanted to learn more about Joomla! So this year, after considering some requests e-mailed to us for Joomla training, we decided to give it a try to offer the training to Joomla users in Malaysia. The Joomla Training will be run by our very own Azrul Rahim and Toby Patterson from Joomla.org. There will be two types of courses that is one Joomla Advance Users Training and another is Joomla Development Training

. We will commence training after September and we're taking up bookings for the training now. First, if you like, take a look at our

Joomla Training Page

. If you'd like to book a place, you know where to find us!